

Helicopter craze in the Vale

Flying helicopters is the latest craze to catch the imaginations of modellers in the Vale of White Horse.

One of the men with the know-how and the technology is Duncan McClure (above), who lives in ~~Uffington~~ ~~Windsor~~, Grove.

He will be demonstrating the techniques of flying his £100 model at the White Horse Model Club's seventh annual show on Easter Sunday and Monday at the Thomas Hughes Memorial Hall, Uffington.

There are four different controls for flying the radio-controlled helicopter, and learning to make it hover is the most difficult, says Duncan who is also building a larger model of an army Gazelle helicopter.

The club's 150 modellers are setting up many static displays for the show, and will also be demonstrating aircraft, cars and boats.
